Aesthetic characteristics

Flat in Barcelona with a large terrace. The combination of black and white has been used both in the kitchen and in the general design of the flat.

Architecture

The situation of the terrace influenced the kitchen's distribution as the aim was to allow natural light to enter the room. To achieve this, the kitchen furniture has been placed in line against one wall including the tall units where the oven, fridge and storage area are integrated.

Next comes the washing and cooking area with two drawer units, a sink unit and a totally integrated dishwasher.

The wall units play a special role with their black glass fronts which contrast with the rest of the units. The kitchen hood is totally integrated into the wall units. It goes unnoticed thanks to the lighting profile..

Highlights

This kitchen is defined by the minimalist profile and its simple forms.

The trend based on simplicity and a clean aesthetic design is still the key idea in the actual kitchen market. All the elements that are not necessary are eliminated and the handles are camouflaged or totally disappear, as in this case.

The Line model's plain front without a handle not only stands out for its aesthetic features but also has an important practical function as its continuous profile system allows the draw to be opened at any point.

Opening system. Profile

Simplicity and aesthetic cleanness are important factors when creating homogeneous spaces. Unnecessary elements are eliminated, the handles are camouflaged or totally disappear, as in this case.

The Line model's plain handleless front not only stands out for its aesthetic features but also has an important practical function as its continuous profile system allows the draw to be opened at any point.

Integrated hood and lighting profile

The double lighting profile, apart from giving us sufficient light for working, also has electrical sockets for small electrical appliances.

Beyond its functionality, the lighting profile gives us interesting aesthetic solutions by allowing the pull-out hood to be integrated in the wall unit area once closed. This helps maintain the uniformity of the kitchen and makes it easier to clean.

This lighting system has been developed by Santos and is, therefore, an exclusive system.
